Autumn's Flame (The Seasons Series Book 4)

Synopsis

Upon her husband's untimely death Elyssa of Freyne petitions England's court to avoid a third forced marriage and to gain custody of her frail son. Never again will a man control her life or her fate. But the shire's new sheriff is no ordinary man. Although Geoffrey FitzHenry, Lord Coudray owns the beauty of an angel--save for the scars his dead wife laid on him--it's said he's the Devil's own spawn. He proves his black heart when steals her frail son from her. To save her son she must reveal that she is with child and put herself in the sheriff's custody. Geoffrey FitzHenry curses the law that demands all pregnant widows live as the sheriff's ward until their babes are born. Taking this coppery-haired firebrand into his sphere threatens all he seeks to protect behind the rumors of his supposed evil nature.

"Autumn's Flame," the fourth book in Denise Domning's "The Graistan Chronicles." Domning has done an incredible job of giving the reader a true flavor of medieval life in this book (as with the entire series) -- the conversations, the action, the feelings -- all have the tone of twelfth century England. The hero, Geoffrey FitzHenry, Lord Coudray, is the third son of Henry of Graistan. Even though the widower hates living at Crosswell (shire's seat), Geoffrey has purchased the duties of sheriff in the shire that oversees the lands that house his father-by-marriage, Baldwin de Gradinton in an effort to keep his now mute and fearful daughter out of Gradinton's grasp. The death of Gradinton's three sons have caused him to go to great lengths to gain custody of Cecilia, his only living heir. "Autumn's Flame" is the story of how Geoffrey becomes the ward over Lord Freyne's newly widowed wife and her son, Jocelyn, a weak, monastery-bound, momma's-boy. Geoffrey is not happy to have to take the sharp-tongued, "won't stay in her subservient place" widow. Geoffrey is afraid that the strong-willed Elyssa of Freyne will unearth secrets that would ruin Cecilia's future. That conflict will arise between Geoffrey and Elyssa is guaranteed, because Elyssa is determined to find out why Geoff would let himself be perceived as evil, so she can extort her freedom and gain custody of her son, Jocelyn.
